

Spinning a yarn

Flickering flames and glowing embers are an invitation to gather round and share good times. This country home features Warmington fires

Once upon a time, every house had an open fire – it was the main source of heat for the family. Today, there are many forms of heating, but the appeal of the fire has never diminished.

Homeowners are also spoilt for choice. Warmington fires, for example, are available as gas fires or wood burners, and come in a wide variety of styles. This means you can choose a fire to suit any home interior, from the ultra modern and minimalist, to country style or traditional.

Fires by Design is the Auckland agent for Warmington fires, which are designed and manufactured in New Zealand. The company works with architects and designers to provide the best solution for each new home or retro-fit project, says manager Greg Stevenson.

"We have qualified engineers who can design bespoke fires if required. In-house test facilities enable us to produce new products as the market demands, and carry out emission testing as required."

Fires by Design also has qualified and experienced staff who can prepare permit applications, smoothing the way when dealing with councils.

For more details of Warmington fires, contact Fires by Design, 47 Sir William Ave, East Tamaki, phone (09) 273 9227. Email: sales@firesbydesign.co.nz. Or visit the website: www.warmington.co.nz.

See other Warmington Fire stories online at trendsideas.com/go/38362a

This page: Warmington fires feature in this Central Otago home designed by Sorted Architecture.

